Yet Abraham believes. The position is irreducible. Wilfred Owen made it an ironic metaphor for his generation's struggle, but this is one occasion when Kierkegaard wants to get beyond metaphor, which might be humanly impossible. The problem is in one way simple: we cannot know the truth.

Kierkegaard's rhetoric rises to this problem beautifully:

Kierkegaard writes, "He towards whom I have a duty is my neighbor, and when I fulfill my duty, I prove that I am my neighbor. Christ does not speak about recognizing one's neighbor but about being a neighbor oneself, proving oneself to be a neighbor, something the Samaritan showed by his compassion."

Metaphor in analytic philosophy. In the Anglo-American tradition of analytic philosophy (in particular, in the philosophy of language), metaphor has attracted interest because it does not conform to accepted truth-conditional semantics, the conditions which determine whether or not a statement is true. Taken literally, the statement "Juliet is the sun" (from Romeo and Juliet) is false, if not ...

From Friedrich Schelling, she takes metaphors of birth; from Kierkegaard, an embodied natural subject; from Slavoj Žižek, a focus on becoming; and from Quentin Meillassoux - a "speculative materialist" admonished by Assiter for being insufficiently speculative - she takes the notion of the "Grand Dehors", an assertion that the world is not delimited by human thought. Freedom, too, extends beyond the human or rational, as "the emergence of the self or the entity from its ...
